

07/01/21 Coronavirus important info: megabus England and Wales suspended. Services within Scotland continue to run

Following the government's guidance to stay at home and stop all non-essential travel, we've taken the decision to temporarily suspend our megabus services in England and Wales, with no journeys running after Sunday 10 January. But we'll still be continuing to run our megabus services within Scotland and a service from Glasgow to London (with intermediate stops at Manchester and Birmingham). These services are for essential travel only, in line with the latest government guidance.

Customers with a booked ticket to travel on our megabus services who have been affected by this will receive an email to either amend their booking or request a refund. If this affects you and haven't received an email from us in 5 days, please contact our Customer Services Team on enquiries@megabus.com who will be able to help.

We're sorry for the inconvenience this will cause you and hope you understand the reasons for our decision. We continue to be on sale for travel from 26 March onwards and are continuing to offer flexible tickets – so you can book with confidence knowing you can amend your ticket up to 24 hours before you're due to travel.

We look forward to welcoming you back on board very soon
